ECDI unveils Capital For Construction program for MBEs

Economic & Community Development Institute (ECDI) unveiled a new program focused on providing financing to minority-owned construction subcontractors. The program, called "Capital For Construction," is a partnership with JPMorgan Chase & Co. The launch event took place July 27 at the Wolfe Shelter house.

More than half of minority contractors surveyed by an ECDI-led working group reported the need for advance payments to bridge the time gap between the start of construction work and payment for the work. Two-thirds of contractors surveyed said they are concerned about starting a construction job without the availability of an advance payment.

Advocate! Resist!

By Ronda Watson Barber - publisher

Resist and Advocate has been the rallying cry and theme for my columns during 2017. As Americans, we have the responsibility to make a more perfect union. We have to create an environment of equal economic opportunities and freedoms for future generations. As Black Americans we have a legacy of working to create equality. We still have major work to do. Columbus has the unfortunate designation of being one of the most economically segregated cities in the nation.

The Columbus Branch of the NAACP has been busy making a positive difference for Black business owners. Under the leadership of President Nana Watson, the civil rights organization has been active in promoting equal and fair access to contracting opportunities for Black-owned businesses.

The Columbus NAACP is following the purpose and goals of the NAACP's Economic Sustainability Plan, as directed by the National NAACP. The NAACP Economic Department's work enhances the capacity of African Americans and other underserved groups through financial economic education; individual and community asset building initiatives; diversity and inclusion in business hiring, career advancement and procurement; and monitoring financial banking practices.

The local group convened a forum of Black business owners to discuss purchasing issues with Columbus City Schools. Through those discussions with the state's largest public school district, the barrier of requiring insurance upon registering as a vendor has been eliminated.

The local NAACP and its members have publicly questioned Franklin County's recently enacted inclusion and diversity plan. The plan includes LGBTQ community members and didn't have purchasing goals. Traditionally, sexual orientation has not been included in procurement inclusion. According to the NAACP, "The plan identifies other groups, yet there is no data showing they have been victims of discrimination. The Federal guidelines for purchasing and procurement protects and assists minorities, women, veterans and the economically disadvantaged." As a result of the NAACP's advocacy, a committee has been formed to establish purchasing goals for Franklin County.

Kudos to the NAACP and its membership. Your economic initiatives to empower Black businesses in the nation's 14th largest city are making a difference.

It can't continue to be business as usual. Now is the time to Advocate and Resist!

Just my thoughts...rwb will provide qualified minority contractors with low-interest advance payments of $5,000 to $150,000. The planning group believes this program will create or retain more than 100 construction jobs per year in Franklin County.

Jesse Mark

"We are thrilled to partner with JPMorgan Chase to provide essential resources to minority-owned businesses in Central Ohio," said Inna Kinney, Founder & CEO of Economic and Community Development Institute. "This partnership strengthens ECDI's commitment to address financing gaps for new and existing MBE businesses, creating new jobs while establishing stronger business sustainability for an often neglected entrepreneur population."

Kinney was joined at the launch event by Pete Mattingly of JPMorgan Chase, Lonnie Miles of McClellan Construction, Dan Moncreif III of McDaniels Construction, and Nancy Tidwell, owner of NRT & Associates.

"Access to capital and bonding has been major barriers to inclusion for contractors, especially minority contractors," Moncreif said. "With this program we're taking a tremendous step as a community toward eliminating capital barriers. I believe this will be transformational for many small, minority-owned construction companies."

In addition to accessing financing, subcontractors will also be able to take advantage of industry-specific training, incubation services, and mentorship opportunities.

Jesse Mark, ECDI relationship manager will oversee this program during its pilot phase. He can be reached for additional information at www.jmark@ecdi.org leaders, and industry influencers to discuss best practices in supplier diversity to build and grow their businesses.

Recognized in Fortune, Forbes and others, Chinedu Echeruo is a serial entrepreneur who has dared to invent the future. In 2005, he founded Hopstop, the pioneering travel app that helped millions of users navigate public transportation in major metropolitan areas around the world. In 2013 he sold the company to Apple for a reported $1 billion.

Chinedu Echeruo, a former hedge fund manager and frustrated New York City resident lost in a vast bus and subway system. His desire to fix the dilemma of figuring out how to get from point A to point B using public transit led to the invention of HopStop.com, a pedestrian navigation service that helps people get door-to-door directions or find nearby subway stations, bus stops, taxi service providers, and car rental places.

Launched in 2005, New York-based HopStop distinguished itself as a perennial innovator in the burgeoning location-based service market with not only its popular online and mobile Websites, but also its industry-leading mobile applications for both iOS and Android. The apps cover more than 300 cities throughout the U.S., Canada, Europe, and the United Kingdom. HopStop grew 250% in three years, from $574,268 in revenue for 2007 to $2 million in 2010 and an estimated $5 million in 2012.

In a historic move, HopStop was sold to Apple Inc., for what some analysts estimate to be $1 billion. HopStops's acquisition by Apple helps to bolster the hardware company's software mapping tools. There is not doubt that Apple paid a large sum for HopStop, says Jim Thatcher, a researcher who specializes in mobile mapping technology at Clark University in Worcester, Massachusetts. "There is a gold rush for mapping apps like it."

As a child growing up in eastern Nigeria, Echeruo always wanted to be an entrepreneur. He attended Kings College in Lagos and Syracuse University and Harvard Business School in the U.S. After working several years in the Mergers & Acquisitions and Leveraged Finance groups of JPMorgan Chase, and later at the hedge fund AM Investment Partners, he founded two Internet-based companies, HopStop.com and Tripology.com (a lead-generation and travel referral business for the travel industry), for which he raised nearly $8 million from private investors. In 2010, he sold Tripology.com to the travel and navigation information company Rand McNally for an undisclosed amount. Tripology is now owned by USA Today.
